Although Christianity espouses a high moral code, some Christians have used deception to advance their beliefs and agendas—forging documents, inventing stories, and fabricating artifacts. This course explores the problem of religious fraud—and more specifically, "pious fraud”—drawing case studies from twenty centuries of Christian history. Students debate possible instances of fraud and wade through the thorny moral/ethical issues presented by these deceptive practices.