

RELI 421

Religion and Science

This course explores contemporary perspectives on the relation between religion and science, Is there a war between religion and science? Do the truth-claims of these two forms of knowledge compete in ways that force us to choose one or the other as our primary allegiance? Are there other options for understanding the relationship between faith and rationality that allow us to integrate different forms of knowledge and different types of truth? We'll explore a number of illuminating historical and contemporary case studies to help us reflect on these questions.

Randall Styers
rstyers@unc.edu

Tuesdays & Thursdays
9:30AM – 10:45AM

General Education Requirements: PH

